A theater and performative camp: from static image to dynamic form. The goal of the camp will be to unleash the creativity of students: starting from analyzing images of Portuguese masters, students will first have to play the depicted scene, choosing the right clothes and decorations, and then let their imagination run wild and add a story, that led to or follows from this scene. Such a theatrical task serves to stimulate creativity, but above all it is a great method to overcome their own limitations, shyness, lack of self-confidence. Thanks to teamwork students will be able to support each other and make the most of their talents. Performance of scenes in front of the audience (we plan to organize a demonstration lesson for other students Portuguese school) is a huge challenge, and at the same time a chance to overcome resistance and believe in your abilities.

The main purpose of these workshops will be to show the links between science and art, that these fields influence each other and that science has changed the perception of works of art. During this training, we plan to cooperate with the University of Camerino, which conducts education in the field of Technology and Diagnostics in Monument Conservation and with the local one a company that has a research laboratory. We intend to cooperate with these organizations conduct workshops for teachers related to the application of modern technologies to works of art research - dating, layer discovery, chemical research etc. to show to participants that there are intersections of art and science, although at first glance these fields seem very distant. In addition, there is a Design School with well-equipped in the region digital laboratory, where it is possible to scan, print and digitize works of art. The information obtained will allow you to diversify not only art classes, but also, for example, chemistry, history or computer science and to provide students with knowledge about very close connections between souvenirs from the past and modern technology.
